Stories from prewar Turobin

They told us about the town, that most of the town were Jews and living together in a community with a synagogue and Bet (Ha)-Midrash, the school of the Jewish people, also with Christians families, Polish families. They were not a majority, but they lived together for years in this town. This town is a very old, hundreds of years. And before the World War II there were something like 2000 Jewish people in this town. They told us a little bit of antisemitism but the life was together, all the people were simple people that worked in the ground, and the cows and lived together. And the war and the Holocaust were something that changed the history of living together.
